Amiga Specialty builds out transactional risks team

Amiga Specialty has hired a team to grow its transactional risks division and expand its offering in Europe.

Sam Batchelor joins as Head of Transactional Risks Europe. Batchelor reports to Richard Mills who joined the specialist financial lines MGA in August as Transactional Risks Managing Director.

He is also joined by Meea Keziah Cabansag who is joining as an Underwriter and George Brain who comes on board as an Assistant Underwriter.

These hires are a statement of intent for Amiga as it positions itself as a leading market in the transactional space in the UK and Europe. Backed by A-rated capacity and with the capability to write warranty & indemnity across the UK and all EU countries. Amiga has a strong focus on recruiting talent and building teams within specialty markets.

Adam Kembrooke, Managing Director and Founder of Amiga, said: "We're delighted to have such exceptional individuals join our transactional risks team at an exciting time for Amiga Specialty. The team is tasked with building out transactional risks in the UK and Europe and will be a fantastic addition to our overall strategy, ensuring robust underwriting quality and exceptional service for the market."

"We see huge value in supporting the transactional risks space. With this trios experience we have the capability to build a substantial Transactional Risk business under the leadership of Richard Mills. I am looking forward to seeing what this talented team can accomplish in the future."

The hires represent the latest growth move for Amiga which recently announced it secured multi-million capacity via the Accelerant Risk Exchange and will be announcing further substantial capacity partnerships shortly.
